President's Message

By Margaret Doyle

WELCOME TO 2004! I would personally like to thank and acknowledge the Board of Directors of this fine organization. Each of them has dedicated themselves and sacrificed their time to make this organization a success. We are proud to add three new members to the Board they are: Michelle Shelley, Joe Marmann and Douglas Stein. Our 2004 Officers are President Elect Craig Sheller with Eric Ratnoff as First Vice President and John Demas as Vice President. Kyle Tamborini is slated this year as our Parliamentarian and Dan O'Donnell will continue as Secretary and Jill Telfer will remain as Treasurer. Jack Vetter will serve as a new board member.

SCA has taken on a special project this year. In conjunction with the Consumer Attorneys of California (CAOC), we are co-hosting the Tahoe Ski Seminar. This seminar is scheduled for March 5-6, 2004 at Harvey's Resort Hotel & Casino in South Lake Tahoe. We are offering a great educational program and hope you will support our efforts to make this a success. Put these dates on your calendar.

This year will be filled with unique challenges. We are all concerned about the recent change at the Capitol and how it will effect our state and the lives of the people we represent. Stay tuned and we will keep you informed. We are working closely with the Consumer Attorneys of California (CAOC) to provide you with the latest updates on the legislative front and we invite your input into these issues. Please get involved!

As you know, our Board of Directors is committed to providing our members with exceptional educational opportunities throughout the year with our Problem Solving Clinics, Programs, luncheon seminars and brown bag luncheons. The SCA 2004 educational program will begin on January 20, 2004 with the Tort and Trial Seminar at the Clarion. I urge each and everyone of you to participate in this invaluable seminar. Next, on January 22, 2003 we will start our Problem Solving Clinics which are scheduled for the fourth Thursday of the month at the Sacramento County Courthouse in Department 2 at 5:30 p.m. We are starting our clinic series with "Insights of a Trial Attorney Turned Mediator" presented by James D. Mart, Esq. Mr. Mart will be discussing the nuts and bolts of mediation including the selection of a mediator. Don't miss this opportunity to improve your mediation skills and obtain better settlement results. (Only $25.00 for SCA members) The first luncheon seminar is slated for Friday, January 30, 2004 at noon at the Birchouse Restaurant. Our first luncheon speaker this year is Louis Metz, D.C.

Any suggestions or comments you have on our educational programs would be greatly appreciated. Please contact our 2004 Chairpersons, David Lee (Problem Solving Clinics), Co-Chairs Glenn Ehlers and Allan Owen (Programs), Co-Chairs Kyle Tamborini and John Demas (Luncheons) and Co-chairs Jack Vetter and Chris Kreager (Brown Bag Luncheons).

Thank you to all who attended our Holiday Party at the Clarion. It was a great success and enjoyed by one and all. This year SCA gathered a total of $1,300.00 for the Mustard Seed Foundation.

Please feel free to contact me at anytime with comments, questions or concerns you may have regarding our organization. I look forward to an interesting and productive year as your SCA President.

BY SENATOR JOE DUNN

It is 2:00 p.m. on a Wednesday afternoon in October 2004, and half of the trial courts across the state are dark. Civil cases are not being heard. Clerks' offices are closed. Court staffs are reduced to part-time or have been furloughed. Morale is at an all-time low. Some did not believe it would really come to this. How could this have happened to the equal third branch of government?

Here's how. Let's begin with some history. California was faced with an unprecedented $38 billion budget deficit for the budget year 2003-04, running from July 1, 2003 to June 30, 2004. Many Democrats were struggling to save critical programs and services and many Republicans were refusing to raise taxes. As a result, the ultimate budget resolution was a convoluted mix of unwelcome cuts, extensive borrowing, deferred payments and short-term fixes. It also included a continuing $8 billion "structural deficit" – which means the state's budget would spend $8 billion more next year than it brings in in revenue.

Now, let's turn to this coming year. Start with a $100 billion annual California state budget and the $8 billion structural deficit going into the 2004-2005 budget, then:

- * Subtract $29 billion in special funds and bonds from the $100 billion that can only be used as earmarked. For example, gas taxes go into a special fund to pay for transportation projects and cannot be used to balance the budget. Voter-approved bonds to build schools cannot be diverted to balance the budget. That leaves $71 billion of the original $100 billion in which $8 billion in savings must be found.
- * Subtract another $32 billion from the $71 billion for K-14 (kindergarten through community college) funding promised by Proposition 98, a 1988 addition to the state constitution that established a minimum funding guarantee for K-14. It is political suicide for legislators to return to their districts having supported cuts to education. That leaves $39 billion in which to find the savings.
- * Subtract another $13 billion in federally mandated minimums (bare bone minimum funding) from the $39 billion for health and welfare programs, such as Medi-Cal, Healthy Families and services for the aged, blind and disabled. For every dollar we cut in these programs, the state loses between $2 and $3 in federal matching funds, which would only make the deficit worse. That leaves $26 billion in which to find the savings.
- * Subtract another $4.5 billion from the $26 billion, which is mandated by court order or federal requirements for developmental disabilities and mental health services, including such things as in-home care for the elderly. That leaves $21.5 billion in which to find the savings.
- * Subtract another $6 billion from the $21.5 billion for corrections, law enforcement and fire protection. It is also politically problematic for legislators to return to their districts having supported cuts to these services. That leaves $15.5 billion that is not legally or politically obligated to be spent.

That $15.5 billion is where the courts' budget comes from, along with many other state agencies, departments and functions. But $15.5 billion is not the end of the story. Remember we are starting with an $8 billion structural deficit.

- * Add $4 billion to the deficit in lost revenue resulting from Governor Schwarzenegger's rescission of the vehicle license fee increase, also known as the "car tax." This money goes to local governments to pay for police and fire protection – local services that are funded by state dollars. That raises the deficit to $12 billion.

- * Add a $2 billion pension obligation bond that the legislature tried to borrow to pay the state's pension payments obligation, but a court recently ruled the bond needs voter approval and voided the bond. That raises the deficit to $14 billion.

- * Add from $2 billion to $11 billion in additional bonds to pay for last year's budget deficit that the courts may hold invalid. That raises the 2004-2005 budget deficit to between $16 and $25 billion.

Now, we have $15.5 billion in discretionary funds, which includes the courts' and other budgets, in which to find $16 to $25 billion in deficits.

Where do we secure any – much less adequate – funding for the courts with a deficit this huge? Plus, not only do we have a negative balance, but what is outlined above does not include funding for state operations, the Legislature, the governor and many agencies. And remember, the courts took substantial cuts this past year and had to swallow new and increased fees to make up for the shortfall caused by the cuts.

Governor Schwarzenegger has reportedly assured the chief justice that he recognizes the importance of the judicial branch. However, there is no money on the table and let's be frank: the courts do not stand a chance of being fully funded when the alternative choice is funding firefighters, police officers, mental health clinics, children or the elderly.

Lawyers, judges, court employees, administrators – this is a call to arms – ignore it at your peril. We are facing a struggle for our very survival. It is going to take all of us all we can do to mitigate the coming devastation of the courts' 2004-2005 budget.

What should you do? Educate yourselves and your colleagues. Get involved; do not be complacent. Participate through your local and statewide bar and lawyer associations in forming coalitions to strongly advocate for the courts with all members of the legislature. Be there whenever you are called upon to act.

This year, when you hear the courts' budget is in serious jeopardy, think about that day next October when the courthouse doors are closed and many staff have been laid off. It could happen. It could happen soon.

Repatriation Revisited

By BY SENATOR JOE DUNN

INTRODUCTION

Allow me to introduce you to three individuals who share something in common: they each unselfishly served their country in time of war. Ruben Jimenez, born in Los Angeles, California, served in the United States Army with the 152nd squadron during World War II. He was selected for training for the Army's then secret radar school and was subsequently stationed in Burma (now Myanmar), India as a radar operator until he was honorably discharged in 1946. Emilia Castañeda, born in Los Angeles, California, served her country during World War II, selling war bonds and packaging drinks for our armed forces stationed in Europe and Asia. Guillermo Diaz Caballero, also born in California, served in the United States Army's 7th Infantry Division. He was deployed to Inchon, Seoul and Pusan during the Korean War until he was honorably discharged in 1953. Ruben, Emilia and Guillermo also have something else in common: they were three of the over one million U.S. citizens illegally expelled from the United States during the Great Depression – solely because they were of Mexican descent – and all in the name of opening up jobs for “real Americans.”

On July 15, 2003, the California Senate Select Committee on Citizen Participation, which I chair, conducted a hearing entitled, The Unconstitutional Deportation and Covert Expulsion of Legal Residents and U.S. Citizens of Mexican Descent, to explore the repatriation programs carried out during the Depression. This is a virtual unknown, and tragic chapter in American history. Although the term “repatriation” historically refers to the “voluntary return to the country of one’s birth,” the hearings revealed that local, state and federal authorities illegally expelled approximately 1.2 million U.S. citizens of Mexican descent from the United States to a country otherwise unknown to them.

The alleged impetus for the “repatriation” program was the Great Depression. Government officials were bombarded with demands “to curtail the employment of Mexicans” and that they “be removed from the rolls and shipped back to Mexico.” In response, the federal government initiated the first raids in 1931,<sup>1</sup> abducting persons of Mexican descent from public places without regard to citizenship or legal status. For the next decade, the federal government, as well as states such as California, Michigan, Texas, Illinois, Montana and Colorado,<sup>2</sup> under the auspices of a voluntary “repatriation” campaign, systematically expelled U.S. citizens of Mexican descent from the United States.

Part I of this article explores this “decade of betrayal,”<sup>3</sup> detailing the mass expulsions as revealed by archived documents uncovered from Los Angeles County, the Hoover and E.D.R. Presidential Libraries, private collections maintained at the University of California at Los Angeles and the Henry E. Huntington Library, as well as the National Archives. Part II will address the scope of the constitutional, civil and human rights violations implicated by this conduct and the propriety of compensating repatriation victims for the harm suffered. Lastly, Part III will focus on the manner in which the Japanese American internment redress movement can serve as a model to obtain redress on behalf of the Mexican American community for the wrongs committed against them during the Depression.

I. THE “REPATRIATION” DECADE: A NATIONAL EFFORT

A. California

Although the federal government initiated the first round of raids against Mexican communities,<sup>4</sup> Los Angeles County capitalized on that climate of terror. Utilizing its then Department of Charities and the Southern Pacific Railway, it embarked on a systematic campaign to remove its Mexican American population. Through this program, Los Angeles coerced its Mexican American population to “return” to Mexico by way of its “repatriate” trains, which carried tens of thousands of people every month from Union Station to the El Paso/Mexico border. Thousands of dollars were repeatedly authorized to help the County in its efforts, culminating in 15 separate repatriation trains by 1934. Subsequent efforts focused on hospital patients, with county officials combing through hospitals to identify indigent leprosy, TB patients, and minor children of Mexican descent, who were taken across the border without any regard for their welfare or well-being.<sup>5</sup>

Although officially Los Angeles professed to deport only “deportable aliens,” Los Angeles County documents show that their efforts were aimed at anyone of Mexican descent.<sup>6</sup> The County was well aware that U.S. citizen children were being deported with legal resident aliens.<sup>7</sup> And although state and local agencies characterized the relocation as voluntary, documents show that people were coerced to leave either by threats of violence or threats of starvation.<sup>8</sup> For example, County officials threatened to cut-off welfare assistance to pressure people to “return” to Mexico.<sup>9</sup> Legislation was passed to prevent persons of Mexican descent from working in the public sector.<sup>10</sup> Industries promised to replace their Mexican American employees so they could provide jobs for “real Americans.” People were forced to abandon, or were defrauded out of, their homes and personal belongings.<sup>11</sup> Efforts against the Mexican American population were accurately characterized at the time as a question of pigment, not a question of citizenship or right.<sup>12</sup> In all, approximately 400,000 people of Mexican descent were forced to leave Los Angeles alone, and an undetermined number expelled from counties throughout California.

B. A Model Adapted Across the Nation

California’s repatriation program was so refined that it served as a model for other states. For example, in 1932, the state of Michigan launched its own “repatriation” program consisting of coordinated efforts between the State Welfare Commission, various cities and municipalities throughout the state of Michigan, and the Department of Labor.<sup>13</sup> The Department of Labor, at the time responsible for overseeing immigration to and from the United States, was active in its oversight of Michigan’s program, promising to “cooperate with the representatives of the Governor of the State of Michigan to the fullest extent, so it is felt that the removal of these Mexicans, to the number of approximately 4,000 ... will be of material benefit to the unemployment situation.”<sup>14</sup> Efforts targeted not only those on relief, but those still employed in various Detroit industries, as well patients in County infirmaries.<sup>15</sup>

The limited documentation uncovered thus far regarding Michigan’s activities reveals at least four repatriation trains arranged by city, state and federal officials between November 15th and December 22, 1932.<sup>16</sup> The Department of Labor memorialized the conditions of the trains and the transfer of its passengers to Mexico, demonstrating the misery imposed upon those forced from their homes in Michigan. For example, on the first train, departing from Detroit to Nuevo Laredo on November 15, 1932, the Department of Labor reported that there was “considerable delay... due to the fact that so many children were on the train and [no one] [sic] imagined they wanted to drink so often that they soon emptied the water cooler” and there “was no provision made for feeding [the children under the age of 5], only furnishing milk and a pint of milk three times a day was not sufficient for a child 3 1/2 to 4 or 5 years old.”<sup>17</sup> The Department of Labor went on to report that people were forced across the border:

[a]bout a dozen of the party requested permission to leave the train at San Antonio, advising that they had changed their minds about returning to Mexico. They were advised by the railroad people that they had no authority to grant such a request. Two young men who had come from Mt. Pleasant jumped through the window at Laredo, Texas, and disappeared. Both were found in the railroad yards just morning by our officers at Laredo and both returned to Mexico...<sup>18</sup>

The full extent of the nation’s repatriation efforts is still unknown. As survivors emerge, their stories implicate cities, counties and states across the nation. Yet to be uncovered are the documents archived by states such as Illinois, Colorado, Texas, Nebraska, Montana, etc., to obtain a comprehensive picture of the governmental role in betraying our nation’s citizens in the name of economic necessity. In this regard, both state and federal commissions to research archival documents and obtain testimony of survivors are essential to obtain an accurate account of this long forgotten chapter in U.S. history.

C. “Repatriate” Struggle

The myths perpetuated over the last sixty years convey the notion that Mexican Americans emigrated to Mexico “voluntarily” and that they faced much hood, educational opportunities, and the right to participate in the political process, similarly requires support and vocal persistence is essential to bring belated justice to those sacrificed in the name of economic necessity. With continued support at both the state and federal level, the California Senate Select Committee's hearing on this shameful episode of our nation's history can serve as the catalyst to not only rectify the injustices of the past, but also to remind us that this travesty of justice could easily happen to any other group during periods of social unrest, political crisis, war, economic recession, or, as is true with our Muslim-American community today, in response to terrorist threats in the aftermath of September 11<sup>16</sup>.

CONCLUSION

We hope concerned individuals and organizations will support and join our effort to seek justice for the survivors of this tragic American episode. For questions or more information, please contact Norma Cobb in my District Office at 714-705-1580.
